was invincible then, just as Jeffries he could fight. The place he still holds in the hearts of the American people is proof enough of that.

Sullivan never was a match for Jeffries physically. His best fighting sight was 195 pounds, while the California giant tipped the scales all from 230 to 255 pounds in his was a year later that John L. got into ring battles.

But Sullivan was the first American

Beavyweight to gain international fame.

True, John C. Heenan went to England.

Strongest characteristic—the bullwould not have been given to the King of England himself if he had come over here.

But Heenan's fight with Sayers only ended in a draw. John L. Bulltvan, when he went to England, scared the British heavyweights so badly that not one could be found to face him in the dogs of his make-up. A few years ago old John went up to see Terry McGovern training at Stratford, Conn Terry was always a favorite with the big fellow. It was in the winter, Sullivan got a sleigh from a livery stable in Bridgeport and started up the main street.

Something gave way, and the next in stent that his street was a street way.

Something gave way, and the next income could be found to face him in the ring.

Sullivan's title to the World's Championship has been much discussed. But he was undoubtedly champion of America. He whipped that in his hands, was jerked out of the sleigh right over the dashboard and was being dragged down the street at the heels of a frightened horse. John L, in a big fur coat, slid on his stomach and held tight until the galloping horse plunged into a snow drift and came to a stop. The crowd rushed up expecting to find a heady injured man. They pulled Smillyan out of the drift, felt him all over for broken bones and smood film up on his feet.

"Why ddn't you let go?" asked an anxious spectator.
